

The sun streams in like a flamboyant guest, not waiting for an invitation. It's rays make it almost impossible for anyone to look out of the window without squinting. High up in the sky, a few large white clouds linger in the piercing blue blanket. A pair of swallows rest upon the enormous lamppost which stands strong to the left of my front garden.

The open driveway in the front garden slopes gently out onto the quiet street. Next to this driveway sits a freshly cut lawn, dotted with white daisies.

Directly opposite, proudly stand two exquisite homes. Both unique in character. Cheekily peeking out from between these homes sits an almighty rolling hill, which stretches as far as the eye can see. Lining the top of the hill are hundreds of humungous trees, who look down upon my little white house as they reach up to tickle the clouds.
